

achievement tend to show a very modest decrease in the probability of trying or using marijuana as SES increases. Finally, for students with relatively high achievement scores, family SES appears to be associated with a modest increase in the probability of trying or using marijuana.

This is not a tremendously strong effect, but it may lend some insight into causes and patterns of marijuana use.